Fast separation method for cyclic nucleotides using column-switching techniques with mixed-mode cation exchange columns. We developed a fast separation method for cyclic nucleotides using column-switching techniques with mixed-mode cation exchange columns. This method uses a large-pore cation exchange column, a small-pore cation exchange column, and a hydrophobic interaction column to separate and analyze all nucleotides, including cyclic nucleotides. All column-switching techniques and mobile phases were optimized to ensure accurate detection and high reproducibility in high-performance liquid chromatography. An on-column concentration method using polyether-sulfonate (PES) was developed to reduce sample consumption and the analysis time by increasing the sample capacity. Validation data showed that the present method could cover the acceptable limits. Sample-to-sample reproducibility for both nucleotide and cyclic nucleotide peaks were below 5% RSD and 2% RSD for nucleotide and cyclic nucleotide peaks, respectively. The present method also demonstrated the ability to simultaneously analyze multiple nucleotides in real biological samples.
