2019 was a big year for Instagram, with the introduction of posts with video, live streaming and, of course, the ability to edit images on the phone. What's more, Instagram Stories is a significantly more robust and diverse tool for brands to tell a story than sending through a standard photo. This has been a crying need for many brand practitioners. One way to craft a story that doesn't use video is to use Adobe Photoshop to use multiple images to create a single story. The move to PixelSense on iOS allows for a design system where the high-resolution display supports full resolution content and adaptive text styles. With the new PixelSense on iOS, the ability to see the full content of the webpage is now a reality. For creatives, the ability to access all of the content of a page without having to switch to a desktop view is a crucial component in the development of a great design. While designers need to switch between Sketch and Photoshop to develop a concept, once the PSD is created they can quickly save it out for a responsive design. The People and Spaces app is designed to help new creative leaders in Fortune 100 companies see what's available in their community, and how those spaces can be used for team collaboration and a connection to the local community. This allows for better storytelling about a brand and better decision-making by making sure that a brand is aware of how their community can help drive their marketing objectives. In 2021, it will be a whole new world for brands and creatives. The rise of AI, machine learning and 3D, along with new features in the update of the Adobe Document Cloud makes for a world of possibility. Although Adobe Photoshop may be the second best option, the future of digital design certainly lies in the creativity of the new members of our team. Introducing this much needed diversity in our team has been a daunting, yet exciting process for us, and we are eager for all of you to help us change the perceptions of what is possible for creatives.
